William Woollett.

INTRODUCTION.

JUST a century has passed away since one of the most distinguished ornaments of the Art of Engraving died. During that period little has been written respecting him. Until the year 1852, no reliable list of his works existed. The curious could have acquired a few facts respecting them from Magazines, from Collections of Anecdotes or from Sale Catalogues.

Previously to Nagler's list in Vol. XXII. of the Künstler-Lexicon, p. 75, where twelve pages are devoted to Woollett, few details had been recorded concerning either his life, or his works. Some exception must be admitted in favour of Adam Bartsch, however, who drew attention (Anleitung zur Kupferstichkunde, Vol. I., p. 229, Vienna, 1821, 8^o.) to Woollett's special and admirable characteristics in respect to technical engraving and to the high opinion which had formerly been held of the productions of this Master. An interval appears to have followed, in which Woollett's merits were somewhat at a discount. But reaction supervened, as might have been expected, and the engraver of the "Death of General Wolfe," and of the "Battle at La Hogue," was again appreciated at his proper value.

The eminent man now under consideration was born at Maidstone, in Kent, on the 15th of August, 1735. Like all the great favourites of genius, he early evinced a propensity to Art. To education Woollett owed little, and he is one of the very few English artists of fame who never were indebted to foreign travel, for his whole life was spent in London, where he secured the applause of his contemporaries and the admiration of succeeding ages.

He was the son of Philip Woollett, a flax-dresser, at Maidstone. Lamprey, in his account of that town, published in 1834, records the place of William Woollett's birth "as the house in King-street, on the eastern-side of the passage leading to Mr. Duke's Alms-houses."

Philip Woollett belonged to a small party of tradesmen, residing at Maidstone, consisting of twelve members, who met in the evening at a small tavern known as the "Ship." Upon one occasion they all subscribed and purchased a lottery ticket, which, being drawn, a £5,000 prize, was divided among the twelve members equally. Philip Woollett suffered from asthma, and the dust from the flax being prejudicial to his health, he upon this acquisition hired a public-house or porter-shop—which was frequented by the most respectable tradesmen in the town—called the "Turk's Head," in the Rose Yard. He was now enabled to put out his son as an apprentice, which he did to an engraver, in consequence of his son having scratched a Turk's Head on a pewter pot. His first master was John Tinney, who worked and sold prints at the Carv'd Golden Lion, in Fleet Street, about 1740-50. Tinney is best known as Woollett's master.

The following extract from some MS. notes, preserved in the British Museum,* collected by Mr. William Alexander,† of Maidstone, Artist and Keeper of the Department of Prints and Drawings, in the British Museum, will be read with interest:—"His father was a thread-maker, a long time foreman to Mr. Robert Pope; the family originally came from Holland. A tradition prevails that the great grandfather of Woollett escaped from the battle fought by the royalists against the parliamentary forces at Maidstone, and that he escaped by swimming over the river to his residence at Tovil. An uncle called "Mouse Woollett" sat on the commonalty barge as the man in armour. An uncle was clerk to Peter Athawes (father of Samuel Athawes)‡ a tobacconist of Abchurch Lane, London, now living at Swallowfield, near Reading. A cousin is now living in low circumstances at Peckham Rye, near London. A nephew of Woollett often visits the above Mr. Athawes. A drawing of his was shown by a merchant to Mr. Tinney, engraver of London, who afterwards took him as an apprentice. Woollett made a drawing of an Englishman holding the horns of a cow and a Frenchman the tail, while a Dutchman is milking it. Woollett was very near sighted, and worked with a glass in his hand and could hardly distinguish a cow from a horse."

The youth on his arrival in London, became a member of the St.

‡ He died at Kingsbridge Cottage, near Reading, May 20th, 1822, aged 88. His portrait was painted and engraved by J. R. Smith, and published in 1805. Samuel Athawes's Collection of Prints, etc., sold at King's, London, on Thursday, February 14th, 1799 (3 days). There is in the Museum, at Maidstone, a drawing by Woollett described as, "the last drawing the famous Mr. William Woollett made of a House Mr. Athawes lives in at Remenham, near Henley-upon-Thames." (Dim. 10½ in. × 7 in.) A view of Athawes' house, Kent, engraved by Samuel Smith (Dim. 11¼ in. × 8½ in.) is in the British Museum.

Martin's Lane Academy, where we learn that he early distinguished himself. John Hall,* the engraver, and friend of Woollett, describes him as being below the middle stature, extremely simple, unpretending in manner and demeanour. In the year 1766, he joined the Incorporated Society of Artists of Great Britain, and for several years was its Secretary, which appointment he resigned about 1773.

Woollett's first work of importance, and, indeed, the first great English work of the kind appeared in 1761. The subject was NIOBE, after Richard Wilson.† It was engraved for Boydell, and produced the sum of £2,000. Its sale abroad, the late John Pye,‡ tells us, "left no doubt in the mind of foreign connoisseurs in dissipating at this early period in the history of British Art, the delusive theory so often promulgated by French and German philosophers, as to the impossibility of rearing talent in the Fine Arts amidst the fogs of Great Britain."

The history of this plate may be best told in the words of Boydell who related it to Mr. John Thomas Smith.§ by whom it was printed in his "Life of Nollekens, and his Times," London, 1828, 8^o (Vol. II. p. 251.)

"At this time, the principal conversation among artists was upon Mr. Wilson's grand picture of NIOBE, which had just arrived from Rome. I, therefore, immediately applied to His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester, its owner, and procured permission for Woollett to engrave it. But before he ventured upon the task, I requested to know what idea he had as to the expense, and, after some consideration, he said he thought he could engrave it for one hundred guineas. This sum, small as it may now appear, was to me an unheard-of price, being considerably more than I had given for any copper-plate. However, serious as the sum was, I bade him get to work, and he proceeded with all possible cheerfulness, for, as he went on, I advanced him money; and though he lost no time I found that he had received nearly the whole amount before he had half-finished the task. I frequently called upon him, and found him struggling with serious difficulties, with his wife and family in an upper lodging in Green's Court, Castle-street, Leicester-fields; for there he lived before he went into Green-street. However, I encouraged him by allowing him to draw upon me to the extent of £25 more; and, at length, that sum was paid, and I was unavoidably under the necessity of saying, 'Mr. Woollett, I find we have made too close a bargain with each other; you have exerted yourself, and I fear I have gone beyond my strength, or, indeed, what I ought to have risked, as we neither of us can be aware of the success of the speculation. However, I am determined whatever the event may be, to enable you to finish it to your wish; at least to allow you to work upon it as long as another £25 can extend, but there we positively must stop.' The plate was finished ; and, after taking a very few proofs, I published the print at five shillings, and it succeeded so much beyond my expectation, that I immediately employed Mr. Woollett upon another engraving from another picture by Wilson ; and I am now thoroughly convinced that had I continued in publishing subjects of their description, my fortune would have been increased tenfold."

Here it is interesting to note that in the London Magazine or, Gentleman's Monthly Intelligencer, Vol. XXX., 1761, p. 701, appeared the following lines on the print of Niobe :—

The scene by Wilson's noble skill display'd
In all the force of magick, light and shade :
A fiery tempest darting from the sky,
In peals proclaiming sure destruction nigh :
Dire vengeance by Latona's offspring shed
On hapless Niobe's devoted head :
Her sons and daughters sharing the like fate,
Transfix'd ! pale objects of immortal hate :
Strongly thy master-strokes these woes impart,
Far as can reach thy imitative art.

Oft had our youth, their progress to advance
In elegance of graving, pass'd to France.
With genius, and a willing mind endu'd,
Their darling studies closely they pursu'd :
Taste they, thro' all her varying rounds, did trace,
And found the secret source of ev'ry grace :
Then rich in skill, quitted the banks of Seine,
And, to our blissful land, return'd again.
Here they new lights held forth ; disclos'd each rule ;
Here, emulous, they form'd an English school,
Which, animated by the royal smile,
Must flourish, and do honou to our isle.
In fame it now with that of Paris vies,
And may, in time, still more resplendent rise.

Woollett, proceed : On thy lov'd art refine :
Proceed ; and just eulogiums will be thine.

J. LOCKMAN.

Alderman John Boydell was born on the 19th of January, 1719, at Dorington, near Ower, Shropshire. It may not be irrelevant to give a short sketch of his life as connected with the subject of our memoir and with the Fine Arts. His father was a land surveyor ; he intended his son to be brought up to his own profession, but the lad's desire was to be an engraver, and he communicated his wish to his father, who discouraged the project. Genuine enthusiasm, however, is seldom trammelled by the dictates of prudence—at the age of 21, young Boydell walked up to London, sought an interview with William Henry Toms, the engraver, and bound himself apprentice to him for seven years.

He was now launched in the ocean of life, and commenced business on his own account. His first publication was six small landscapes, which he sold for a shilling each, these he stitched together, and the book was called The Bridge Book, as a bridge was introduced in the scenery of each plate. His exertions continued unremitting, and by continued application, he executed one hundred and fifty-two landscapes; these he collected into a portfolio and sold them for five guineas the set. Boydell used to say with pride, in after life, that it was the only book which had made a Lord Mayor of London.

He now resolved to abandon the pursuit of his art and, by liberal encouragement, to secure the services of the first talent of the country. In Woollett he found an artist who realized all his wishes. The celebrity of his plates enabled Boydell to establish a correspondence with eminent foreign printsellers. Large sums of money were remitted from the Continent annually for the purchase of prints—and England became an exporting country; the balance of trade being largely in her favour.

The following extract from a speech delivered in the House of Lords, by the Earl of Suffolk, on the 13th of March, 1803-1804, corroborates the above statement:—

“On the motion for the first reading of Boydell’s Lottery Bill,* the Earl of Suffolk rose, not, he said, to oppose the Bill, but he could not pass by the opportunity which it afforded him of warning the artists of this country of the great injury which they were doing, both to their own character and interest, and to the interests of the country, by the slovenly manner in which most of the works of art in this country were now executed. He stated it to be a fact, that in consequence of the very superior execution of the print of the Death of Captain Cook,† by Woollett, and of the Battle of La Hogue, English engravings had risen to a high reputation on the Continent. So much was this the case, that for the former of these engravings, Woollett received between £5,000 and £7,000, and the revenue coming to this country from this branch of art, at one time exceeded £200,000 per annum.”

On the 5th of August, 1782, Boydell was elected Alderman of the Ward of Cheap. In November, 1786, he met at a dinner party Benjamin West, George Romney,‡ Paul Sandby, Hayley the poet, and Hoole the translator of Ariosto and Tasso. In such a company the Fine Arts formed a large part of the conversation—the Alderman was complimented on the liberal encouragement he had given to the Art of Engraving. In acknowledging the compliment, he said he was not yet satisfied with his efforts, and that notwithstanding his age, he still cherished the ambition to refute the stigma cast upon English artists by foreigners, that England possessed no genius for historical painting. This observation was received with acclamation; and in December of the same year the plan of the well-known Boydell's edition of Shakespeare was matured and a prospectus issued. In 1803, the publishers printed a catalogue of the plates which formed their stock, and which ran to forty-eight volumes. Among the artists employed were Smirke, Hamilton, Reynolds, West, Fuseli, Wheatley, Wilson, Stothard, Romney, etc.; among the engravers, James Fittler, Mason, W. Sharpe, Heath, Hall, J. Smith, V. Green, Bartolozzi, Earlom, etc. John Boydell was elected Lord Mayor of London in 1790, and died on the 11th of December, 1804, aged 85.

* In 1804, Boydell obtained the sanction of Parliament to dispose of his Art property by lottery. The Gallery fell to the share of Mr. Tassie, modeller, of Leicester-square, who died in 1861. Boydell had spent £500,000 in plates for prize prints, £46,266 in pictures and drawings, and £30,000 in the Shakespeare Gallery. The lottery was drawn in 1805.

To return to Woollett, whose fame was now well established. He was appointed on the 27th of November, 1775, Engraver in Ordinary to His Majesty, King George III,* i.e. while engaged on his chef-d'œuvre, the "Death of General Wolfe," published on the 1st of January, 1776.

What occurred to this plate is related in the subjoined manuscript note, preserved in the Department of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"This excellent proof† was purchased at Dr. Peart's sale,‡ whose discrimination was most exact. It was purchased by him at the price of thirty-six guineas, the precise price it produced at his sale. It then became the property of Mr. W. Cattley,§ at whose sale I re-purchased it.

"The plate is extremely rare in its original state, in consequence of an accident which occurred during the first proving by the folly and inadvertence of Mrs. Hocquet's son. The entire relation of this affair is appended to a proof in the possession of D. Mackintosh,|| Esq., attested by the man who at the time of its occurrence was an apprentice to Mr. Hadrill, printer, and who at this period is in my employ.

"This impression is, to the best of my knowledge, the finest finished impression in existence, and is one of the very few uninjured proofs that were taken. It is the more to be desired as the injury was inflicted on the face of General Wolfe.

"A copy of the original attestation signed also with the autograph of Matthews is at the back of this paper."

"I, Joseph Matthews, was apprentice to Mr. Hadrill, residing at No. 8, Rupert Street, Coventry Street, and during my apprenticeship, Mr. H. was employed to print many plates engraved by Mr. Woollett, who was very partial to Mr. H.'s talent as a printer.—Among others, 'The Roman Edifices in Ruins,' 'The Maid of the Mill,' 'The Fishery,' 'The Battle at the Hogue' and 'The Four Shooting Pieces' were printed by Mr. Hadrill.—When the plate of the 'Death of General Wolfe' was in the course of engraving, Mr. Hadrill pulled all the proofs for Mr. Woollett and was promised the printing of the plate when it should be printed for publication. This plate, however, not being the entire property of Mr. Woollett, he was obliged to consent to the introduction of Mrs. Hocquet, who, by the interest of Mr. Bartolozzi had been strenuously recommended to Mr. West as the proper person to whom so valuable a plate should be intrusted.

"In consequence of this arrangement Mrs. Hocquet received the plate, and had just began to pull the first proofs, when, leaving the press for some domestic arrangement, the son, who assisted her in pulling the press and filling in, seating himself on the press plank took up a hammer, and beginning to strike, said, 'I could soon be the Death of Wolfe.' This proved to be a luckless word for no sooner was it uttered than the hammer fell upon the face of Wolfe, and thus the finest part of this fine plate was destroyed.

"Mr. Woollett came to Mr. Hadrill to express his deep regret that the plate had been taken out of his (Mr. Hadrill's) hands, and so great was his own mortification—to have, as he expressed it, his finest work destroyed that he wept.

"JOSEPH MATTHEWS.

"Oct. 5th, 1824. Witness A. M. Huffam."

"Matthews related this anecdote to me, and told me that young Hocquet's expression when he took up the hammer was, 'General Wolfe is dying, and I'll be d——d if I don't kill him quite.'"

"G. BAKER."*

The demand for this print surpassed the most sanguine expectations of its proprietors—they were Boydell, and William Wynne Ryland,† besides Woollett himself, who watched over the reputation this work acquired for him, by superintending the printing of it, and by giving the plate such occasional labour as was necessary to enable it to answer the demand. And thus the sale of the print went on, proofs and impressions commanding progressively increasing prices, till his death, when the entire property of the plate passed into the hands of Boydell.

The writing on the margin of it was then taken out, the subject retouched, and in this repaired state open-letters were again introduced and impressions from the plate sold. In 1791 the imposition was discovered; it gave rise to a letter that was printed and circulated among artists and amateurs, of which the following is a copy:—

* George Baker was the son of the Rev. Thomas Baker, Vicar of Hungerford, in the County of Berks, where he was born in January, 1747, and died in London, February 7th, 1811. His collection was sold at Sotheby's, June 6th, 1825. (3 days.) "With him the names of either Woollett or Hogarth formed an irresistible talisman; and his collection of the works of those engravers may be considered as eminently rich, and, probably, matchless."

† Born in London, July 1738, and hanged at Tyburn, August 29th, 1783.

*"From the late William Woollett, Engraver, to the Right Hon. John Boydell,

"From the Banks of the Stygian Lake, 1791.

"My Lord,

"It is rumoured by the numberless shades of famished artists who daily arrive in these gloomy regions, that an attack has been made upon the reputation I left in the upper world, of a nature so grievous, that, even at this distance from the busy scenes of life, it has quite destroyed my peace, and hindered me from passing into the happy bowers of Elysium; the grim ferryman refusing me a passage from these dreary shores, till my 'perturbed spirit is at rest.'

"O my Lord! have pity upon a 'poor ghost,' and revenge its injuries! The Death of General Woife! Ah! there's the cause of all my sorrows! Would your Lordship believe it, that all the shades of those artists who are passing hourly into the mansions of eternal peace, who have exhausted their vital principle to ennoble the arts, or have expired in gaols, or died martyrs, to enrich carvers and gilders, and stationers, and printsellers, and trading Mæcenases and manufacturing adventurers, all-all-all din in my ears, as they pass by me, that the work on which I spent my health, to which I sacrificed all earthly comforts, and prematurely deprived myself of the light of the sun has, since my departure, been most basely butchered! That my unwearied efforts to rescue the arts in Britain from contempt and obloquy, and the beginning I made to a new and inexhaustible source of dignified commerce to my country, has been rewarded by having the humble sprig of bay, which I had gained by years of laborious industry, most barbarously torn away from my scarce cold corpse. That those works which were my best, have fallen into mercenary hands, who, from views the most mean and despicable, have caused them to be retouched by a miserable botcher in so vile a manner that, if I could 'again revisit the glimpses of the moon,' I should not know what was once the execution of my own hands. Nay, to increase my torture, a newly arrived shade even now whispers in my ear, that (oh, infamous allusion!) the writing has been erased, and false proofs have been taken off, and foisted upon the public as originals, with my own name, the title, the date, and the original publisher's names, all shamefully, pirated and copied from those I struck off in the year 1776. Oh, my Lord, let me conjure you, by the zeal you are said to manifest towards the arts, to use the powers which you are so happily vested with to root out and expose to public detestation the man who, divested of every principle of humanity, every respect for the arts, and every impulse of honour, could thus stab the memory of one who never wished for other reputation than what was founded upon honest endeavour; of one who never envied the praise or detracted from the character of another ; nor ever brought disgrace upon his profession by tricking and imposition.

“I am convinced what must be your Lordship’s sensations on reading the above recital, and how much your generous nature must be shocked on being informed that actions of so black a dye should appear in the circle of the arts ; but, at the same time, I am sensible how particularly happy you will esteem yourself on being informed that you are, above all, the most proper for bringing this unprecedented iniquity to light and punishing it. First, As having been yourself an artist of the very first abilities, you, particularly, will feel the extent of the injury done. Secondly, As being the most likely to find out the base depredator, from your situation as a merchant, and your employing every person in the line of the arts (whom you can agree with), it is most likely that the shameless wretch may not long remain undiscovered, provided your Lordship makes a strict search. And thirdly, As your faithful and truly able discharge of the duties of a chief magistrate insure immediate redress to the injured, I will not intrude further upon your Lordship’s time, well knowing that you will not require any incentive to act with justice and honour ; therefore I shall not attempt any appeal to your feelings in order to urge you on in the pursuit, nor call to your remembrance that your petitioner was once the friend of your heart ; that he is ‘gone to that bourn from which no traveller returns ;’ that he is now no longer able to defend a reputation he valued more than life from the attacks of the mercenary and the base ; or that, while dying, he consoled his parting spirit with the assurance that you, my Lord, who had so often acknowledged him not only as your friend, but as your greatest benefactor, and had repeatedly confessed (with the modesty peculiar to true greatness) the poverty of yourself and all your relatives, before you were furnished with those works of his which laid the foundation of all your present greatness,—I say, My Lord, I will not urge any of these considerations to push you on in the pursuit of justice, well knowing that ‘to do good and to walk humbly’ is your highest delight ; and that ‘to do unto others as you would have them do to you,’ is your constant maxim. I therefore humbly take my leave for the present, trusting in your Lordship’s goodness, and hoping that the money you have lately so generously subscribed towards erecting a monument to my memory, on account of my having executed those very works which have since been so basely spoiled, will be now applied towards bringing to condign punishment the wretch who has so shamefully imposed on the liberality of a generous public, and who, by cruelly defacing the print of ‘The Death of General Wolfe,’ has destroyed for ever the only monument desired by the injured.

In placing the works of Woollett in the first-class of the School of Engraving,* British or otherwise, it will be proper to observe that no artist's works were more exclusively his own. Historical engraving includes every kind of object which can, by art, be presented to the sight, and of course requires a knowledge of their form and texture, in an equal degree with that requisite to the painter of history. But it is not only with the form and texture of the object that an engraver must be acquainted; he has to pursue a process far more difficult than that of the painter, to accomplish his object:—every variety of character, every kind of substance, solid or transparent, must be expressed by lines or points, and it is in their skilful arrangement that the taste and powers of the engraver are shown. His education must be in the same school as that of the painter; he must have a perfect acquaintance with anatomy and perspective. The painter devotes himself to delineating the pictures formed in his own mind, and conveys to the spectator the same impression of colour, which he has conceived, as also all the varied changes which light and air produce in a landscape. If the mind of the colourist is exclusively occupied in the first conception of his picture, that of the engraver is equally absorbed when reflecting on the mode best calculated to produce the proper effect by the arrangement of his lines, ere he ventures to place them on the copper, whether they stand forward in bold relief, or are mellowed by reflected or borrowed light—in short to convey to the eye the various gradations of colours, which have been expressed by the artist on the canvas.

It was at a meeting of artists held at the Turk's Head Tavern, in Gerrard Street, Soho,† when the bottle had circulated freely and the glee of the company was manifested by repeated peals of laughter,—that one peculiarly pointed jest raised the tone of mirth to its highest pitch, when Woollett inquired of Mortimer what had occasioned the mirth.

“I was thinking,” replied Woollett, “which way I should lay the lines of the coat of General Wolfe.”

There is nothing perhaps so satisfactory, after thoroughly acquainting ourselves with a beautiful picture, as to possess an engraving of it; the roundness of the form displayed in the figures, the adjustment of the drapery,

* Longhi, (La Calcografia. Milano, 1830. p. 226). “In his works he exhibits so much artistic mastery, so much vivacity and boldness of touch, so much force and harmony of chiaro-oscuro, so much truth, in fact, and so much historical illusion, that he was for all contemporary engravers, and is for those of the present day, the marvel and the example.

† Once the celebrated rendezvous of Johnson, Goldsmith, Burke, Garrick and other luminaries who formed the memorable Literary Club. At the same time that the meetings of these literati were held on the first floor, a coterie of artists and amateurs were wont to assemble in the ground floor beneath, Hogarth, Wilson, Reynolds, West, Ramsay, Mortimer, Zoffany, Zuccarelli and other painters; Woollett, Strange, Vivares, Brown, Bazire and other engravers. In this Tavern, the earliest conclave was held to cogitate upon the important question of the utility of a National Academy for the promotion of the arts of painting and sculpture; and from thence resulted the St. Martin's Lane Academy, the Exhibitions of the Society of Artists, and the Royal Academy.

the distant background with its clear and fleecy clouds, which under the skilful hand of the graver, present all the beautiful and striking colouring of the master.

Few persons know the continuous labour that must be unsparingly given for months together to a copper-plate, and well may the engraver be anxiously careful of each step he takes ere the advance becomes an error—a slight alteration may be the work of weeks, nay, months. An instance in the practice of Woollett will exemplify this.

Woollett, after engraving "The Battle at La Hogue," waited on Benjamin West with a finished proof. The painter expressed himself highly satisfied with it, but remarked, "If a little more colour could be given to one part, and a little alteration in the light to others, it would improve the appearance of the plate." And taking out his port-crayon, he marked in black-and-white chalk what he meant. The engraver immediately consented to make the desired additions. "But how long will it take you, Mr. Woollett?" said West. "Oh—about three or four months," was the reply. "And the patient creature," said West, "actually went through the additional labour without a murmur."

Woollett resided for many years at No. 11, Green Street, Leicester Square, where it is traditionally said that he was in the habit of firing a cannon from the roof whenever he completed an important engraving. He then removed to Charlotte Street,* Rathbone Place. Here he died on the 23rd of May, 1785, from the effects of a neglected injury while playing at Dutch pins several years before.†

William Woollett was buried in the Churchyard at Old St. Pancras‡ where a plain tombstone marks the spot. On this tomb were written the following lines in pencil:—

"Here Woollett rests, expecting to be sav'd,
He grav'd well, but is not well engrav'd."§

It is not improbable that some admirers of the eminent engraver in seeing these verses decided to erect a more important memorial to his memory, and a subscription was raised to which Benjamin West and John Boydell were very liberal contributors.||

It now stands in the West Cloister of Westminster Abbey. It was executed by Thomas Banks, R.A., and is inscribed simply with the date of Woollett's birth and death, and the Inscription Incisor Excellentissimus beneath the bust. Below is "the Genius of Engraving handing down to posterity the works of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture, whilst Fame is distributing them over the four quarters of the Globe."

His widow and two daughters were left in such narrow circumstances, that in the year 1814, a subscription was raised for them, and in 1843, the following paragraph appeared in the "Mirror," at page 94. "Miss Elizabeth Sophia Woollett, the daughter of the celebrated engraver of that name, is now, at the age of seventy, among the applicants to the National Benevolent Institution for relief Mr. Woollett died in 1785. In 1817 the family were driven by necessity to make over to Messrs. Hurst and Robinson, publishers, all Mr. Woollett's plates and prints, for the consideration of an annuity for two lives. In six years the firm of Hurst failed; and the only surviving daughter, reduced to penury and in broken health, depends upon the success of her present application for support. The friends of art will surely do something for the unfortunate lady. When such a supplicant appears 'can pity plead in vain'!"

Elizabeth Woollett, the widow, died on the 15th of December, 1819, aged 73. Respecting her, we read in the "Westminster Magazine," of November 24th, 1781, as follows:—Mrs. Woollett, wife of the celebrated engraver—of twins. This is the fifth time Mrs. Woollett has been brought to bed of twins, and once she had three children at a birth."

It remains for me gratefully to acknowledge the kindness and consideration with which those collectors and publishers, from whom I sought information, have responded to my applications. It is impossible to particularize all the channels through which I have received help; I must, therefore, content myself by expressing my thanks to Dr. G. J. Vine; Dr. Ginsburg; Mr. Edward Bartlett, of the Museum and Public Library, Maidstone; Mr. I. B. Muir; Mr. Algernon Graves; Messrs. Colnaghi; Mr. Harvey; Mr. Daniel; Mr. Nosedá; Mr. Young; Mr. Lauser, and to Mr. Fawcett.

The Picture, formerly in the Leigh Court Gallery, was sold at Christie's, June 28th, 1884. It is now the property of Mr. Alfred Brassey.

SMITH in his Catalogue Raisonné, Volume viii. page 278, No. 157, says :—"This and a picture described No. 185, are known under the appellation of the Altieri Claudes, having been purchased from a Prince of that name by Mr. Fagan [Robert Fagan, H.M. Consul-General in Sicily, etc., amateur artist, died in 1816, the grand-father of the present writer], who concealed them for some time at Naples, and at length succeeded, during a popular disturbance, to ship them on board an English man-of-war, and consigned them to a merchant in this country. By some mistake they did not reach their destination, but were landed at a port in the West of England, where they remained for a considerable time, and were advertised for sale among custom-house goods; no person, however, bidding the amount of the duty upon them, they were fortunately reserved, and ultimately claimed by the owner. They were subsequently sold to William Beckford, Esq., with a few small Italian pictures, for £7,500; from that gentleman they passed to Hart Davis, Esq., for the sum of £12,000; and were lastly transferred, with many other first-rate pictures to John Miles, Esq., in whose collection, at Leigh Court, they now are."

Claude Gellée, called Claude Lorrain, was born in Lorraine, in 1600, and died at Rome in 1682.

Frontispiece to Kirby's Perspective of Architecture.

After WILLIAM HOGARTH.

Dimensions:—15 $\frac{1}{2}$ in. by 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ in.

- 2ND STATE.—The capital of the column finished. Artists names etc. as above. B.M.
- This plate was engraved for a work entitled "The Perspective of Architecture in two parts. A work entirely new; deduced from the Principles of Dr. Brook Taylor . . . By Joshua Kirby." London. Folio. 1761.

Thomas Malton, in the Appendix to his Treatise on Perspective says:—"Here is a curious frontispiece, designed by Mr. Hogarth. . . . To me it conveys the idea which Milton so poetically describes, of the Angel Uriel gliding down to Paradise on a sun-beam; but the young gentleman has dropped off before he had arrived at his journey's end, with Palladio's book of architecture on his knees. A ray of light from the sun, rising over a distant mountain, is directed to a scroll on the ground, on which are two or three scraps of perspective over which, supported by a large block of stone, is the upper part of a sceptre, broke off; the shaft very obliquely and absurdly inclined, somewhat resembling the Roman fasces, and girt above, with the Prince of Wales's coronet as an astragal, through which the fasces rise and swell into a crown, adorned with embroidered stars; this is the principal object, but most vilely drawn. The ray passes through a round temple at a considerable distance, which is also falsely represented, the curves being, for the distance too round, and consequently the diminution of the column is too great. It appears to pass over a piece of water; on this side the ground is fertile, and luxuriant with vegetation, abounding with tress and shrubs, on the other side it is rocky and barren. What is indicated by this, seems to be, that where the arts are encouraged by the rays of royal favour, they will thrive and flourish, but where they are neglected and do not find encouragement they will droop and languish."

See: Hogarth, Illustrated by John Ireland. London, 1797, Vol. iii. p. 173.

At page 19, we read :—"Plate II.—A View of the west-end of the Temple of Minerva Polias, and of the Pandrosium. The Turkish gentleman smoking a long pipe, is the Disdár-Agá, he leans on the shoulder of his son-in-law, Ibrahim Agá, and is looking at our labourers, who are digging to discover the base, and the step of the basement under the Caryatides. He was accustomed to visit us from time to time, to see that we did no mischief to the Building; but in reality, to see that we did not carry off any treasure; for he did not conceive, any other motive could have induced us, to examine so eagerly what was under ground in his Castle. The two Turks in the Pandrosium were placed there by him to watch our proceedings; and give him an account of our discoveries. The little girl leading a lamb, and attended by a negro slave, is the daughter of Ibrahim Agá. The lamb is fatted to be eaten at the feast of the Beiram, which was not far off at the time this view was taken."

The copper-plate is in the possession of Messrs. Henry Graves & Co.

Benjamin West was born at Springfield, in Pennsylvania, October 10th, 1738, and came to England in 1763. He was one of the original members of the Royal Academy, and succeeded Sir Joshua Reynolds as its President in 1792. He died at his house in Newman Street, March 11th, 1820.

Samuel Middiman, engraver and draftsman, was a pupil of William Byrne. He died in Cirencester Place, December 18th, 1831, aged 61.

XCIII.

The Death of General Wolfe.

After BENJAMIN WEST, P.R.A.

Dimensions :—24 in. by 18 $\frac{3}{4}$ in.

1ST STATE.—The Etching. B.M.

2ND STATE.—The faces and hands of the General and his Staff, in outline. The horizon white, and with marks of the graver in the margin. B.M.

3RD STATE.—The face and hands of Wolfe, the head of an officer in the background on the left, and the clasped hands of the soldier on the right, still in outline, and likewise the horizon. B.M.

4TH STATE.—With the General's face and the wristband of the Ensign unfinished, and before some additional work on the French Flag, carried by an officer, seen on the extreme left. B.M.

There is in the British Museum a touched proof.

5TH STATE.—The General's face, and the wristband of the Ensign finished. B.M.

6TH STATE.—The legs of the above-mentioned officer, carrying the French Flag, altered, i.e., the right leg thrown forward instead of the left. B.M.

There is in the British Museum a touched proof.

7TH STATE.—With the white cross on the flag in the right distance, immediately over the head of the soldier holding a pike, shaded over. B.M.

8TH STATE (OR 1ST Published State).—Proof with open letters. Before the retouch in the smoke and the cross hatchings on the butt of the gun. The place on the feet of the General, which in the preceding state forms a white spot, is shaded, and the following inscriptions, etched. On the left :—Painted by B. West. On the right :—Engraved by W. Woollett. In the centre :—The Death of General Wolfe. Below :—*Publis'd as the Art Directors, London, January the 1st, 1776, by Messrs. Woollett, Boydell and Ryland. B.M.

This state is frequently met with having the words : Historical Painter to His Majesty, under West's name, and Engraver to His Majesty, under Woollett's name written with the pen. When about thirty impressions had been printed, Woollett was appointed (Nov. 27th, 1775) engraver to the King. The press was consequently stopped, and the above-mentioned additions were engraved. These impressions which had been previously printed off had the additions inserted, as stated, with pen-and-ink.

There are a few impressions apparently identical with the above, but they are not genuine. The writing on the margin of the plate was taken out, the subject retouched, and in this repaired state open letters were again introduced, and impressions from the plate sold.

* See : Ferrario Giulio. Le Classiche Stampe. Milano. 1836. 8o. page 383.

These impressions, however, are distinguished by the W's of W. Woollett's names, being scarcely more than one-half the size of those in the genuine open-letter proofs. Moreover the work of the spurious proof is wanting in strength and clearness. In 1791 the imposition was discovered, and gave rise to a letter that was printed and circulated among artists and amateurs. See Introduction, page x.

9TH STATE.—With Coat-of-Arms, the following dedication and inscriptions :—To the King's most excellent Majesty. This plate, The Death of General Wolfe, is with His gracious Permission humbly dedicated by his Majesty's most dutiful Subject & Servant, William Woollett. From the original Picture in the Collection of Lord Grosvenor. On the left :—Painted by B. West, Historical Painter to His Majesty. On the right :—Engraved by Wm. Woollett, Engraver to His Majesty. Below :—Published as the Act directs, January 1st, 1776. by Messrs. Woollett, Boydell & Ryland, London.

10TH STATE.—The plate much worn and re-worked by an inferior hand. The publisher's address has been re-engraved, and the letters are somewhat larger. The Coat-of-Arms and the entire lettering has likewise been re-worked. This state is also identified by the cross hatchings on the butt of the guns, that of the Indian's excepted, and on the shako on the ground, to the right.

Key to Six of the Portraits with the names affixed to each :—

Dimensions :—7 $\frac{1}{8}$ in. by 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ in.

Brigadr. Genl. Monckton, second in Command.

Colonel Williamson, commanding the Artillery.

Major Barré, Adjutant General.

Capt. Debbieg, Engineer.

Capt. Hervey Smyth, Aid de Camp to Genl. Wolfe.

Mr. Adair, Director and 1st Surgeon of the Hospital.

Below :—Published as the Act directs, March 4th, 1776, by Messrs. Woollett, Boydell and Ryland, London. B.M.

The original painting, which is in the collection of the Duke of Westminster, at Grosvenor House, was exhibited at the Royal Academy, No. 210, in the year 1771. [Canvas, 4 ft. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ in. by 7 ft.]

A prejudice was created against this picture, in consequence of the artist adopting the modern military costume instead of the classic dress of antiquity. Earl Grosvenor, however, agreeing with West, that it would appear ridiculous to represent modern troops in the dress of Greeks and Romans, purchased the work. A replica was ordered by George III., for which West received £315. It now hangs in Hampton Court Palace, No. 320.

There are several other repetitions of it.

Robert Wright, in "The Life of Major-General James Wolfe," London, 1864, 8°. p. 602, says :—"Romney was the painter who first made Wolfe's death the subject of an historical picture. In 1763 the Society of Arts awarded him their prize of fifty guineas. But the decision was revoked, and the young artist, instead of the prize, was presented with half the amount. The popularity of the subject, and the merit of the work, however, were the means of his procuring considerable employment. Romney's picture of 'The Death of Wolfe' was afterwards bought by his friend Stephenson, the banker, and by him presented to Governor Varelst, who placed it in the Council-chamber of Calcutta. A few years later, West painted the well-known picture by which he acquired fame, and the engraver Woollett, acquired fortune. What Kemble did for the stage, it has been remarked, West did for Art. He discarded classic costume, and painted British soldiers in British soldiers' uniform. 'The same truth which gives law to the historian,' said West himself to Reynolds, 'should rule the painter.' West's picture, withal, does not represent the truth, and nothing can be more absurd than to call it historical. 'The Indian warrior,' says a critic, 'watching the dying hero to see if he equalled in fortitude the children of the deserts, is a fine stroke of nature and poetry.' But, what if no Indian warrior was there? Monckton, Barré, and other persons portrayed in the group around Wolfe were not on the spot. Monckton had been shot through the lung; Barré had been blinded; and Surgeon Adair, who is represented in attendance, was then at Crown Point. West wished General Murray to figure in the picture; but the honest Scot refused, saying, 'No, no! I was not by; I was leading the left.'"

Major-General Wolfe, born on the 2nd of January, 1727, was killed on the 13th of September, 1759, in the moment of victory before Quebec.

There is a parody on West's picture, etched by Gillray, entitled:—The Death of the Great Wolf. Published, December 17th, 1795, by H. Humphrey, 37, New Bond Street. It has reference to the attack upon Pitt in the House of Commons, December 1795, on the occasion of the Estimates. The dying hero, Pitt, is supported by Dundas, who offers him a farewell glass; and by Burke, whose "Reflections" are now upon his pension. Sir C. Long and his brother, as the two runners; Lord Grenville, supported by Wyndham; old Pepper Arden, known by his nose and wig; and Wilberforce and Richmond, a weeping couple, are all easily recognised. See: Wright's Gillray, 1851, 80., p. 72, No. 140.

The following advertisements appeared in a newspaper (name unknown), Wednesday, 18th December, 1772:—"The Print of General Wolfe, engraved by Mr. Woollett, will be delivered to Subscribers only, on Monday, the 4th of March next, by Messrs. Woollett, Boydell, and Ryland. Subscriptions will be taken in till then at £1 rs. each, after which none will be sold under £1 5s."

"Messrs. Woollett, Boydell and Ryland propose publishing by Subscription a Print respecting the Death of General Wolfe, from a capital Picture painted by Benjamin West, Esq.; Engraving by Mr. W. Woollett. The size of the Plate 24 Inches and a Half in length by 19; the first Impressions of which to be delivered to the Subscribers at One Guinea each, half to be paid at the Time of subscribing, and the Remainder on Delivery."

"Subscriptions taken in by W. Woollett, in Green Street, Leicester Fields; J. Boydell, No. 90, in Cheapside; and W. Ryland, at Mr. Sotheby's, Printseller, facing Hungerford Market, in the Strand." B.M.

Frontispiece to “Rhodope.”

After ANGELICA KAUFFMAN, R.A.

Dimensions :—8¾ in. by 6½ in.

- 1ST STATE.—Proof before letters, but with artists' names etched in. On the left :—A. Kauffman del. On the right :—Delatre sculp. B.M.
- 2ND STATE.—The etched names erased, and engraved towards the centre, and the following added :—Published as the Act directs, 1 May 1780, by E. M. Diemar, Strand, London. B.M.

The figure only engraved by Woollett.

This plate occurs (not always) in a work entitled :—"The History and Amours of Rhodope. Printed for M. Diemar" (N^o. 317,) Strand 1780. 4^o. At the beginning of this volume is the following notice :—"To the Public. The inimitable performances of an Angelica Kauffmann, and the masterly strokes of the graver of a Francesco Bartolozzi, are so well known to all the admirers of the fine arts, that it would be imprudence to pretend to recommend them to the public, by a performance like this. But the history of Rhodope might either be overlooked by many, or forgotten by others ; it is therefore with this view that the publisher found it necessary to instruct the one part, and to refresh the memory of the other, by a short recital of the history and amours of Rhodope. Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, Plutarch, Ovid, Svidas, and others gave the materials for this History ; the putting of the materials together, and embellishing the whole by poetical fiction and episodes has fallen to the share of the Author. The well known History of Rhodope's and Æsopus's love is the subject of one picture of Signora Angelica Kauffmann ; and that of the second, the choice the King of Egypt made of Rhodope for his spouse. The pen is unable to give an account of the infinite merit of the fair Artist's performance and of each excellence of her pencil. The soft, pithy, and masterly graver of the other Artist alone is capable of doing her amply justice, by recalling to our minds that correctness of the design, the nobleness and elegance of the characters, the judicious grouping, the excellent disposition of the whole, the manly and well understood Chiaro oscuro, the soft touches of the flesh, the simplicity and beauty of the drapery, the poetical animation, the expression, and acquaintance with the ideal beauty, so richly displayed in the two pictures, which the publisher humbly and respectfully offers to communicate to the public, in two beautiful Engravings.

"The above prints, the publisher hopes to be able to deliver to those who will honour him with their subscription, some time in the month of October of this present year ; as one of them is already in great forwardness. The price to subscribers will be one guinea for them both (when printed in red) ; half of which sum is to be paid at the time of subscribing, the other half on the delivering of the two prints : after which time the price will be advanced to non-subscribers. Impressions taken off in colours, are to be subscribed for at three guineas both prints ; one-half of which sum is to be paid at the time of subscribing, and the other half on the delivering of the two prints.

"E. M. DIEMAR.

"N^o 377, Strand,

"March 20, 1780."

Delattre was a French artist, who came to London in 1770.

Maria Angelica Kauffman was born at Coire in the Grisons, October 30th, 1740. In 1765 she came to England, and upon the foundation of the Royal Academy, she was elected one of the original members. She died in Rome, November 5th, 1807.

CVIII.—CXIII.

Illustrations to a Work entitled :—Antiquities of Great Britain, Illustrated in Views of Monasteries, Castles, and Churches, now existing, Engraved by W. Byrne, F.S.A. from Drawings made by Thomas Hearne, F.S.A. With descriptions in English and in French." (2 vols. 83 plates.) Obl : fol : London. 1807. (Vol. I. published, Feb: 2nd 1786).

In the following six plates the figures only were executed by Woollett. The subjoined MS. memorandum is in the Department of Prints and Drawings, British Museum :—"Besides the Hermitage at Warkworth by Woollett and the figure in Lanercost Priory—

“the figure by Woollett, Mr. Hearne assured me the 29th April, 1800, that the figures in the following plates were engraved by Woollett altho’ his name is not put to the plates. West End of Malmsbury Abbey; Castle Acre Castle; Brancepeth Castle; Monastery of Tinemouth, 3 Sept: 1800.”—And the following note by W. J. White:—“The portrait in the plate of Lanercost Priory is that of the Rev^d — Davy of One House, Suffolk, and the lines of poetry were written by him which are to be found in the after impressions of the same plate. The seated figure in the plate of the West End of Malmsbury Abbey is the son of the above named gentleman, who was the author of the verses, afterwards added to this plate. There is a small print from an original drawing by Woollett of One House, Suffolk, which is finished as an engraving in pen and ink. It is of a rather large size, and was once in my collection.”

The line of publication, engraved ; the date :—October 18th, reads 18 Oct., B.M.*

The key to this print has been engraved on the same plate with that of the "Battle of the Boyne." Two figures only are indicated, viz.: Sir George Rooke and King James II.

The original picture, executed for the Earl Grosvenor, is now at Grosvenor House. (Canvas 5 feet by 6 feet 11 inches.)

The battle was fought against the French fleet in the harbour at La Hogue, on the 23rd of May, 1692, by the boats of the combined English and Dutch fleets, under the orders of Vice-Admiral Rooke.

A copy by George Chambers is in the Gallery of Greenwich Hospital.

On the 25th of March, 1783, a small printed circular, of a square form by way of advertisement was issued :—

"To the Nobility and Gentry who have favoured us with Subscriptions to the Prints of the Battles of La Hogue, and the Boyne—Mr. West, Mr. Woollett and Mr. Hall, respectfully return thanks for their support in the publication ; and take this opportunity to acquaint them that agreeable to the original plan of selecting from British Story, striking events of national importance, Mr. West is now painting two others, one Oliver Cromwell expelling the Long Parliament of the Commonwealth, the other, General Monk meeting King Charles the Second on the Beach at Dover, and when finished will be engraved by Mr. Woollett and Mr. Hall."

4. Outline, No. 18, of John Young's Catalogue of the Pictures at Grosvenor House. London. 1821. 4^o. B.M.

Respecting this painting William Dunlop, in Vol : I. p. 89 of the "History of the Rise and Progress of the Arts and Design in the United States," 2 vols : New York, 1834, 8^o. tells us: "The Battle of La Hogue is one of West's best pictures. There is a remarkable coincidence in the general aspect of this very fine painting, with a Dutch picture of the Triumph of De Ruyter in the Thames, when he took possession of the Royal Charles, burnt several ships of war, and threw the kingdom into consternation. The engraving (of the same size of West's and Woollett's print) is entitled 'De Beroemde Enderneming op de Rivieren van London en Rochester,' and it is marked where in English prints the painter's name is given 'Getekend door Dk. Langendyk, 1782,' and where the engraver's name is given 'Gesneiden door M. de Salliech te Rotterdam;' and in the midway between these inscriptions is 'urt gegeven by D. Langendyk, M. de Salliech en Dirk de Yong te Rotterdam.' West's and Woollett's print was published the 18th October, 1781—probably the painting made five or more years before. If 'getekend door Dk. Langendyk, 1782,' means painted by Langendyk at that date, we must think that he has taken a hint from West; but although there is a similarity of aspect, and somewhat of incident, the figures are dissimilar. The dispositions of the ships and figures are reversed, as is done in engraving, ... It is suggested that the Dutch picture was painted shortly after the affair represented, and the print perhaps engraved, but the publication suspended (as a peace-offering to England) when the peace took place; but after the declaration of war and during our revolutionary struggle, the print was published. According to this hypothesis, West may have seen a proof of the Dutch print, or had a sight of the painting, before making his great picture of La Hogue."
